While the evidence which this government possessed has not been made public, these disclosures connect him definitely with the operations of several who are under arrest in this country because of their activities against the laws of this nation.

It is another case where the efforts through the enemy's lines have failed, and while they might have expected that they would, the revelations only furnish greater proof of the pernicious activity of the German repretetives in this country.

AID TO BLACKMAILERS. When the Mann white slave law was

When the Mann white slave law was passed by congress and put into action for the purpose of preventing vice that was being commercialized throughout the country excellent judgment was used in attacking this evil, but as in many other instances none too much thought was given to the scope of the law which was being made. The law covered what was intended and has met with excellent results in putting a stop to this interstate commerce in women, but it did more being drawn on such a broad basis that ing drawn on such a broad basis that it was possible to include thereunder many cases which were not what the law was particularly aimed at. It has been used in a number of cases to improve immoral conditions which under ordinary circumstances are taken care of by the laws of the various states. Insofar as it was pos-sible to use this law in such cases because the federal law often gets respect where state laws are winked at a service has been rendered public complaint and one which has now been made by the department of jusof blackmail which has accompanied

This may not reflect a clean bill of morality on the part of those fleeced, but there are laws to take care of such departures from the nerrow path without providing an avenue in which the pro-fessional blackmailers can work. For that reason changes in the Mann act are sought, but if they are made they should not be such as to interfere with the original purposes of the act

MONTENEGRO AND ITALY.

There have been conflicting report as to what Montenegro is going to do now that the Austrians have captured Mount Lovcen which was relied upon for the defense of Cettinje. From one to arrange a separate peace with Austria already having declared a truce, while from the other comes a denial of any such thing. Under the cir-cumstances fighting as they are against such overwhelming odds and without any relief being sent to them it would not be surprising if they had thrown up their hands except that such is not characteristic of those ditional huts are being built for more. The old barracks are inadequate to house all of the prisoners and streets of huts extending over both slopes of a little valley form a small town for their accommodation. The whole campis surrounded by a wooden and wire fence inside of which barb wire entanglements form a barrier dominated by sentry boxes from which a squad of guards armed with rifles overlook every possible avenue of escape. These sentries are the only visible evidence of human restraint for except a few of human restraint for except a few commissioned officers assisted by four sergeants and a small squad or red cross orderlies there is not a single British soldier inside the compound. For the first time since German war prisoners have been brought to England unofficial neutrals were allowed to inspect one of their camps and an Associated Press correspondent was personally conducted over the place by the commandant, Major W. C. Bulkeley, D. S. O., who not only allowed him to see everything in the place but permitted him to talk freely in private with the prisoners.

The visit was made under the worst possible weather conditions, a heavy of human restraint for except a few old artillery barracks, a long row of brick buildings with stables on the ground and quarters for the men above. The stables, well warmed by sheet iron stoves, form primitive but comfortable quarters, while the rooms above, each equipped with from two to four bunks, are the prize quarters of the camp. The other quarters are in long rows of temporary wooden huts, each housing about thirty men. All are warmed with sheet iron stoves, and in estimating the comfort of the camp this feature stands out in the viewpoint of the neutral observer, who finds the prisoners huts considerably more comfortable than the average grate-heated London house.

In the old barracks are well equipped tallor and boot shops, where the prisoners of those trades repair the uniforms and footwear of their comrades. These workmen are paid six shillings weekly. Many of the prisoners strive with their uniforms and boots in wretched condition, and the tallors and bootmakers are kept very busy. These workers were the most contented looking of all the prisoners, except the cooks and ther kitechen workers, who are also paid for their

The corps messes together and has very comfortable quarters. In the center of the mess hall hanging from the ceiling is the following motto in German: "We Germans fear nothing on earth except God". This is also the spirit of a number of mottoes scattered about the various huts. The officers in charge of the camp reported that the problem of discipline gives them little trouble.
